Aurora brain-map project: fMRI experience. Advances in neuroimaging have had a strong impact in the functional neuroanatomy of the human brain. However, it has proven difficult to apply the basic tenets of neuroanatomy to the study of human brain function. The Aurora Project aims to overcome these problems by developing functional neuroimaging techniques that are sensitive to specific human functional systems. To date, we have completed four separate studies that examined: (1) motor and sensory systems, (2) emotion and arousal, (3) attention, and (4) perception, memory, and language. These results indicate that the technique is sensitive to the activity of the primary motor cortex, somatosensory cortex, and occipital cortex. The influence of socioeconomic factors and health insurance on place of death in Italy. Recent research suggests that where people die is influenced by both patient and environment characteristics. Data from the 2006 Italian Confidential Mortality Files show that the place of death has changed, and 82157476af
